1

Describe this summer in one word or short phrase.

2

What does the concept of reconciliation from last Sunday's 2 Corinthians reading mean for the political divide and polarization that exists in our country?

5

A variety of American religious communities in the 18th and 19th centuries made do without physical houses of worship, often relying on tent-style revival gatherings. As more worshiping communities are meeting either online or outdoors, discuss whether the role of physical buildings may (or should) change in the future.

3

Parker Palmer writes: "Who I am does not depend on what I do." Are these words a helpful contrast to a culture that tends to conflate identity with vocation?

4

John Pavlovitz: "If more American Christians listened to Jesus, they'd be the first ones wearing masks in a pandemic, the first ones opposing children taken from their parents, the first ones demanding refuge for exhausted foreigners fleeing violence, the first ones opposing police brutality, the first ones declaring that Black Lives Matter—not the last ones." Discuss.
